They gave their time and material for no other pay than love, and when finished, the cottage was the best building on the island. We fixed it up quite prettily, and the people delighted in it as much as we. One wot., went home and tried to arrange her house as nearly like ours as she could, but it was hard work to repress a smile, while calling on her, to see the Perry pictures turned upside down. To show that we appreciated what had been done for us, we took turns, and some one lived in the house for a month. We often had twenty or twenty-five girls1 with us at a time, and the Kusaians showed that they appreciated having us live at their village by keeping us supplied with more food than we could...
